

TOPIC: SPEECH: WORDS OF THREE SYLLABLES STRESSED ON THE 2ND SYLLABLE

Stress is the degree of force by which a word is pronounced. Words are broken into tiny units called syllables. A syllable is the pronounced unit of a word. It is on a syllable that stress is placed. Stressing a syllable therefore means giving it more force, such that it is louder, longer and higher in pitch than other syllables.

A stressed syllable like in the dictionary is indicated by placing a stroke at the beginning of the syllable, but here, a stressed syllable should be written in capital letters.

THREE SYLLABLE WORDS

Three syllable words are parts of polysyllable words which have their different stress patterns with some guiding rules. These rules help us to identify when to stress the word on the first, second, third or fourth syllable.

For three syllable words stressed on the second syllable, the rule guiding it says

Stress the second syllable from the end of a word if it ends in : - cient, - ion, - ic, - ial, - ian.
