

Speech: ORAL COMPOSITION ON EXPOSITORY ESSAY

An expository essay is one in which the writer is expected to expose or explain a given topic. It aims at explaining and describing how something is done or how something works. For example students may be asked to write on how a particular machine or equipment works or how to prepare a particular meal.

To write an essay of this nature, the writer must know enough about the topic as it is designated to inform and educate the readers.

It has the following outline

1. Title
2. Introduction
3. Body of the essay
4. Conclusion

How to write a good expository essay

- i. Content to discuss at length the topic you are asked to discuss. You are expected to unfold the bad and good consequence of the topic.
You will earn a good mark if your content is well developed
- ii. Organization: there should be an introduction and conclusion.
Your points or ideas must be fully developed in the body of the essay
You are expected to arrange your points in a logical sequence
Your sentences should be a variety of long and short sentences
Make use of phrases or word linkers to link your paragraph with one another.
The conclusion which must come after the body of the essay should briefly sum up the main ideas and make a conclusive statement on the topic.
- iii. Expression
You must make sure that you state your facts, instances and points clearly
Your vocabulary should be carefully chosen for effectiveness, especially when you are writing on a topic that has a formal register.
Your prose, clarity of expression is important
Your language should be formal, you should avoid slangs, clichés, unidiomatic expression and meaningless phrases.

The oral composition can be on any topic for example it could be on identifying the major causes and suggest ways to reduce road accidents.

Paragraph (i) Introduction

What caused your article to be written

(ii) First major cause of road accident

(iii) Second major cause

(iv) Suggestions on how to curb road accidents

(v) Conclusion
