

Continuous writing: Argumentative Essay

An argumentative essay is one that requires you to present a subject with a view to persuading your reader to agree with your own point of view against another one. An argument may be developed.

- a. to prove a point
- b. to present a view point
- c. to balance the two side of an issue

The major differences between debate and argumentative essay is that in argumentative you are not seeing your audience so there will not be any need to greet. In argumentative, write your topic, and start writing your views point without addressing anybody.

Useful hints on how to write a good argumentative essay

1. Content

Here you look for the key words and show a good understanding of them before putting pen on paper.

Female children are more beneficial to their parents than male children. The operative words here are beneficial and parents.

Here you must interpret your question very well

- a. At least five arguments fully developed for or against a topic are enough for a good mark.
- b. Stop your opponent before he stops you by knocking his points with your arguments.

2. Organization

In argumentative essay you should imagine having an audience listening to your argument. You should therefore start with the usual vocative and refer to your audience from time to time. After this you should take your position for or against the topic.

In the body of the essay you should support your view with strong points. You can quote notable figures in the area you are arguing on.

In the conclusion; reaffirm your position. Remember that good paragraphing, coherence through the use of linking words and logical sequence of ideas will be adequately rewarded.

Expression: Use simple sentences and rhetorical questions to carry your audience along.

Assignment

Write for or against the topic “it is better to attend a school near your home than one outside your neighbourhood.