

Speech writing is the process of preparing a spoken message for an audience. A good speech is clear, engaging, and easy to understand—especially when you are speaking to people directly.

Here's a simple guide you can follow:

1. Understand Your Purpose

Ask yourself:

Why am I giving this speech?

Do I want to inform, persuade, or entertain?

Example:

Inform → teaching about health

Persuade → encouraging people to vote

Entertain → telling a story or joke

2. Know Your Audience

Think about:

Age (young or old)

Education level

Language (simple English or advanced)

Since your English is still growing, using simple and clear words is best.

3. Structure of a Good Speech

a. Introduction

Greet your audience

Introduce your topic

Example: "Good morning everyone. Today, I want to talk about the importance of education."

b. Body

Present your main points (2–3 points is enough)

Give examples

Example: "First, education helps us gain knowledge. Second, it opens doors to better jobs."

c. Conclusion

Summarize your points

End with a strong message

Example: "In conclusion, education is the key to success. Let us all take it seriously. Thank you."

4. Use Simple Language

Avoid long and difficult words

Speak clearly and slowly

5. Practice

Read your speech aloud

Practice in front of a mirror

Time yourself

 Example of a Short Speech

"Good afternoon everyone.

Today, I want to talk about cleanliness.

Cleanliness is very important in our daily life. First, it helps us stay healthy. Second, it makes our environment look neat and beautiful.

In conclusion, we should always keep our surroundings clean. A clean place is a healthy place.

Thank you."
